This old Saying is usually applied to such Persons as are impertinent, either in Discourse or Writing, and it is, indeed, an intolerable Fault to be either; for, though Rhyme be but a Jingle, it affords Delight by the Musicalness of its Cadence, when, for want of both Rhyme and Reason, it neither delights the Sense, nor improves the Intellectuals. 'Tis probable it had its Original from the famous Sir Thomas Moore, Lord Chancellor of England, in the Time of King Henry VIII. of whom it is storied, that, an Author asking Sir Thomas's Judgment of an impertinent Book he had written, he bid him turn it into Verse; which he did, and shewed it to Sir Thomas, who replied, Why ay, now 'tis something like, now 'tis Rhyme, but before 'twas neither Rhyme nor Reason.

Many talk of Robin Hood, who never shot in his Bow.

[This Robin Hood was a famous Robber, and storied to be an expert Archer in the Time of Richard the First, about the Year 1200; his principal Haunt was about Shirewood Forest in Nottinghamshire.] This Proverb is applicable to all ignorant Pretenders and Braggadochio's whatsoever, either in Knowledge or Business. It intimates that Bragging and Boasting are common Impertinences in Conversation, equally among Travellers and Soldiers, as well as Poets and Painters, who never out-did Nature yet, but only in the Lye. But they who pretend themselves to be what they are not, will always be prating of what they do not know. So, Non omnes qui Citharam tenent, Citharadæ sunt, say the Latins: Πολλα μὲν νερηκοφόροι παῦροι δὲ τῇ βαρσῃ, the Greeks; and Milti jarlan di Orlando, chi non videro, mai suo brando, the Italians.

Robin Hood's Pennyworth.

This Proverb is usually applied to such as, having gotten any thing dishonestly, sell it at a Price much below the Value, according to the Proverb, Lightly come, lightly go; and Robin Hood is alluded to, because being an expert Archer, and so coming easily by it, he could afford to sell

Venison as cheap as Neck-Beef; according to the Latins, Aurea pro Aëreis, and the Greeks, χρύσεια χαλκείων: But others on the contrary apply it to such as would buy lumping Pennyworths, still alluding to Robin, but upon another Consideration, viz. his being a Robber; who, tho', as Camden calls him, Prædonem mitissimum, the most gentle and generous of Thieves, when Cash run low, would have what he wanted at his own Rate, which his Chapmen were forced to take, or else he would have it for nothing.

This Proverb is not only levelled at a careless Groom, but has a more extended Aim; it intimates, that 'tis a mighty Imprudence to neglect the weighing of all the Circumstances of an Action, both as to Time and Place, before we venture upon doing what perhaps we may repent of in the Event, to our great Shame and Damage. This is generally the Wisdom of the World, when the Thing is over, we are as wise as Experience can make us. Almost all the Miscarriages of Mankind are for want of Thinking: After Wit is commonly dear bought, and we pay for it either with Misfortune, Anxiety, or Sorrow; for there is no unthinking a Misfortune, after it has befallen us for want of Precaution and Foresight; an After-thought may inance our Trouble, but can't relieve our Distress; it may prevent like Inconvenience for the future, but it cannot make any Satisfaction for what is past. Serrar la Stella quando s'han perduti i.e. buovi, say the Italians. Eft temps de fermer l'estable qu'ad les Chevaux en sent alle, the French. Quando quidem accepto claudenda est janua damno, the Latins. One Whan had better steal a Horse than another lose over the bridge.

This Proverb does not justify stealing at all; it means very honestly, and is only a smart Turn upon all partial Proceedings, as well in private Judgment as publick Trials, intimates, that when great Rogues are in Authority, and have the Laws against Oppression and Robbery in their own Hands, little Thieves only go to pot for it; and that inferior Pirates are punished with Death at the Gallows, while great Offenders live safe and secure under the Helm of Government. This Proverb is for doing all People Justice alike, from the Highest to the lowest, and in all Cases whatsoever, either of Desert or Demerit. We live indeed in a thieving, cheating, and plundering Age; Cozening is become a topping Trade, only we have got a genteeler way of stealing now than only to take a Man's Horse from under him on the Highway, and a little loose Money out of his Pocket; our Rapparees are Men of better Breeding and Fashion, and scorn to play at such small Game, they sweep away a noble Estate with one slight Brush, and bid both the Gallows and Horse-Pond Defiance; and the Mob is not always just in this Point, for one Pick-pocket deserves a Horse-pond as well as another, without any regard to Quality or fine Clothes. But Dat Veniam Corvis, vexat Censura Columba, say the Latins.

He steals a Goose, and gives the Goblits in Alms.

This Proverb Points at such Persons, who by Acts of Injustice, Oppression and Frauds, amass to themselves large Estates, and think to atone for their Rapine by doing some charitable Acts while they are alive, or when they can no longer possess them, by leaving their Lands in Mortmain to pious and charitable Uses, as building and endowing Hospitals, Alms-houses, and other Acts of Beneficence (commendable indeed, when done from a truly Christian Charity) but they who think by thus paying Paul, to atone for their robbing Peter, entertain an Opinion highly disparaging the Justice of the Almighty. Parallel to this is the Hebrew Adage.

Well begun is half ended.

All the Actions and Enterprizes of Mankind labour under the Reflection of this quaint moral Sentence, whether they be prudent or imprudent in the Undertaking and good or bad in the Accomplishment. It intimates that Persons should be very deliberate and advised in the beginning of an Undertaking; for that to begin well is the only Way to quicken and dispatch the End; let it be what it will. It intimates that there is a great deal of Difficulty in beginning well, and that a false Step at first Start is hardly to be recovered afterwards: That the Work does not cost half so much Trouble as the Design of it; that it is an easy Matter to make way when the Ice is broke. It reflects upon false Foundations and foolish Projects, and it holds good from Morality and worldly Affairs to Religion, That a good Beginning is a fair Step to a good Ending. Dimidium facti, qui bene cepit habet, say the Latins; and Αρχὴν μισοῦμαι τοῦ. Arist.

All is well that ends well.

It is plain Matter of fact, that the End crowns all Things, and that every Thing is not to be judged amiss that may appear so for the present. A worldly Misfortune, if it quickens our Diligence and Industry; a severe Fit of Sickness, if it promotes our Piety, and makes us amend our Lives, is well, tho' for the present no Affliction seems joyous but grievous: For a happy Death is the never-failing Portion of a well spent Life, which always ends in eternal Bliss and Glory. The best way of judging of Things beyond Mistake is by the Issue or Event of them. Finis coronat Opus, say the Latins; and Αλκυονίδας, Alcyonides, the Greeks.

growing very rich would at last sell none of his Works, but gave them away, saying, He did not know how to set a Price upon them equal to their Value. He painted a Bunch of Grapes so to the Life, that the Birds came and peck'd them; and afterwards having painted a Boy holding a Bunch of Grapes, which the Birds also flew to and peck'd, he was angry, and ingenuously confessed that his Work was not compleat, in that if he had drawn the Boy as well as he had done the Grapes,
the Birds would have been afraid of him.
And having disputed with Parrhasius,

painted a Curtain so ingeniously, that Zeuxis taking it for a real one which hid the Antagonist's Work, desired it might
